

Sir John Egan Greets Swedish Construction Professionals

This year's Partnering in the UK event offered a delegation of Swedish Construction professionals an insight into the practical tips and techniques of Partnering and Collaboration practices right through the construction supply chain.

Organised by Stradia, the dual location event was held on the 22nd and 23rd October at City Inn hotels, Birmingham and Westminster.

Delegates, from Copenhagen and Stockholm, were greeted by a selection of construction related presenters including Steve Vickers of Birmingham City Council, Peter Woolliscroft of Cyntra and Construction Client Group, Tom Foulkes of ICE, John Ioannou of OGC, Nigel Barr of Stradia and Dave Sheridan of Apollo.

Guest speaker, Sir John Egan, author of Rethinking Construction, impressed delegates with past experiences, tips and techniques of current Partnering practices and how the UK has adopted this approach since the introduction of the Egan Report back in 1998.

Delegates, who felt the presentations were extremely valuable to drive partnering forward in Sweden, commented "The combination of case studies and presentations were inspiring, it is great to see how partnering and collaboration theory works in practice".

Nigel Barr, Managing Director of Stradia quoted "Delegates have been exposed to a level of expertise and knowledge not available in their home country. Not only were they constantly referring to various aspects of the two days but their feedback forms left us confident that the programme and the high quality speakers exceeded their expectations".
